BAIX EBRE, PATHWAY TO THE MEDITERRANEAN, ABLAZE WITH LIGHT

The Ebro River is the soul and the backbone of a county like Baix Ebre, to whom it owes its very name, but that doesn't mean that its value as a tourist attraction is derived solely from the charming nature of the river. In fact, if this area pleasantly surprises its visitors, it is because of its contrasting diversity.

Of course it is undeniable that Baix Ebre has a mighty river which provides plenty of leisure and tourist activities but at the same time it has: a mountainous land mass with a summit of 1447m at Mont Caro, a birdwatching paradise, so much to offer to cycling enthusiasts, and a cuisine that has always used the area's excellent local produce.

This region of Catalonia is a world apart, a little known cove, an unspoilt beach, cheerful folk holding fairs and festivals, the crossroads of cultures down through the ages, refuge of the last bandit of the XIX century, coast of barbary pirates, coastal and mountain trails, kids cycling with smiles on their faces, the Renaissance right here, the juiciest oranges, the tastiest seafood, round grain rice, the episcopal town of Tortosa, the acclaimed "via verda" cycleway, surfing in the sea, walking in the hills, topped off with History and Culture wherever you look, wherever you go.....

The Ebro River is the quintessence of the county of Baix Ebre, omnipresent amidst stunning scenery, extraordinary tourist appeal.

Let's put it like this, Baix Ebre provides a thousand and one possibilities given its geographical vantage point between the second most important wetland in the Mediterranean (el Delta de l'Ebre) and the little known but most wonderful national park in the country (the Ports Nature Reserve).

Needless to say the Ebro is omnipresent, the key player, this watery homeland, stunning scenery, extraordinary tourist appeal. Two nature reserves and a majestic river go some way to explaining why the Catalan Ebro counties have recently been recognised as Biosphere Reserves by UNESCO.

THE EBRO DELTA NATURE RESERVE, where everyone can find their paradise

It is not in question that the Ebro Delta is one of Catalonia's biggest surprises. It has been a Nature Reserve since 1983, and after the Camarga in France, with which it has close historical links, is the second most important wetland in the Mediterranean. Deltas around the planet are a world unto themselves –different, in every sense–, and the Ebro is no exception.

Devotees of birdwatching are certainly in no doubt about the Delta's importance, but you don't have to be an expert in birds to be impressed by the sight of flamingos among more than 300 species that are found here. Especially when you consider that in Europe as a whole there are only 600 catalogued species.

Seeing flamingos (one of the few breeding colonies in the peninsula is here on the Ebro Delta) or Audouin's gulls (70% of those found in the world have their home here) is an inducement not confined to the birdwatchers of the world. Any visitor, young or old, cannot fail to be fascinated by the white mass of a flock of sandwich terns or the shade of salmon pink seen in a big colony of flamingos, no matter how little they know about birds.

Devotees of birdwatching are certainly in no doubt about the Delta's importance, but you don't have to be an expert in birds to be impressed by the sight of flamingos among more than 300 species found here.

The Ebro Delta's rich array of flora and fauna might be its main attraction (more than 700 recorded species and the largest aquatic habitat in Catalonia), but 75% of the area is still used to cultivate and Man has had a hand in shaping the beauty of the place.

The orderly arrangement of the paddy fields and their metamorphoses according to the season contrasts with the wild beauty of the lagoons, fresh water springs, unspoilt beaches and salt water marshes, lending a hypnotic feel to the Ebro Delta, a fine balance between human endeavour and Nature.

Whoever visits the Ebro Delta wants to return, and that has been made easier by developments over the last 30 years to provide a wide range of services to the visitor: good accommodation, excellent local cuisine and an huge assortment of activities with something for everyone.

For those who want to lose themselves in a desert-like beach with dunes on the horizon, for families who want to have a stress-free bike ride together, for those who really want to get away from it all and relax, for fishing enthusiasts, for those whose cameras will not capture anything higher than 4 metres high, for those who love watersports, walking and finding genuine local customs at the end of the track.

In other words, the delta is ideal not only for those who want to be active but also for those who just want to enjoy the view of the vast 360 degree horizon.

THE PORTS NATURE RESERVE the mountain that has no end

The Ports Nature Reserve is the the third largest in size in Catalonia. It goes beyond Baix Ebre into other Catalan counties (Montsià i Terra Alta), as well as into Aragon and Valencia, and the Government of the Second Republic (in 1932) recognised the need to protect this area and its natural wealth.

Hardly surprising then, that in 1966 the range was declared a National Hunting Reserve, and has long been a favourite destination among tourists with an interest in hunting.

The vastness of the Ports (800 square kms) provides for many and varied possibilities, but most especially for Nature lovers, walking, climbing and caving. Amongst certain groups of Catalan walkers the Ports provide a must see vantage point from where you can see as far as the Pyrenees in one direction and the Balearic Islands in another on a clear day.

Eventhough the Ports are largely unknown to the general public, their immense, wild expanses undiscovered, does not mean that they are only of interest to the most experienced of walkers and mountaineers.

While it is true that challenging cycle trails and walks are plentiful here, when the park was declared a Nature Reserve in 2001, easy paths were opened up to the general public so that even families can enjoy getting to know the area.

The visitor that has never set foot in the Ports, will always be very pleasantly surprised to say the least, and very often blown away, by the experience. It isn't an exaggeration because at times one seems to have been transported to woodlands in the north of Europe rather than the Iberian Peninsula. In fact the Ports has the most southerly beech woods of the whole peninsula (a designated area of special interest within the park itself), something very rare in southern Europe.

In amongst all this natural beauty are nestled towns and villages within the Ports, strikingly at one with their surroundings and full of character, amassed over the centuries in their stories and legends of hungry wolves, mythological woodland beings, Panxampla the bandit and the young Picasso in search of inspiration.

TORTOSA, the city that makes history fun

Tortosa has pride of place in any account of the history of Catalonia, so not surprisingly it has been the episcopal see since the IV century or earlier and boasts an impressive gothic cathedral. Tortosa still has its historical centre that was declared of great architectural and historic interest in 1976, and is made up of the most important Renaissance remains in Catalonia.

History makes itself felt at every corner of this city, there are Roman remains (of what was Dertosa), remains of the Moors, (who had their last domains in Catalonia here), the Jewish presence in medieval times, Christian walls and fortresses, Renaissance and barroc palaces, Modernisme in the XIX and XX centuries, the Spanish war of Succession and the Civil War of 1936-1939...

Tortosa is History, but it also knows how to look back and have fun with its heritage in the here and now. Every summer all and sundry take to the streets to deck them out ready for the Renaissance festival, not to be missed, in commemoration of the glory of the XVI century.

This spirit is seen too in the many reenactments and events that are held throughout the year in the old Jewish quarter of the city, home to the most sizeable Jewish community in Catalonia between the XII and XV centuries.

Tortosa's historical centre remains intact and distinguishes itself as having the best examples of Renaissance architecture in Catalonia.

“Tortosa, famous city” (as it has often been called) is a place where the visitor walking in the old quarter comes across picturesque nooks and crannies in the streets and squares and sees how the past and present merge into one. Nowadays bars, restaurants and shops occupy the very same spots where, centuries ago, there were taverns, craftsmens’ guilds and merchants.

In Tortosa too, as in Baix Ebre as a whole, the river watches and waits, as it has done down the ages, while floods are remembered in the very walls of the houses and in the “limnògraf” of Xerta church, as are boats wrecked in the river and ships setting sail from the city’s port bound for the Mediterranean.

THE RIVER, flowing through the homeland

The River Ebro is not simply a blue line from a geographer’s pen on a map. For the places along the river, like those of Baix Ebre, the Ebro is the artery that carries the lifeblood of the territory.

That’s because the river, more than a geographical fluke, is a watery motherland with its heroes, ghosts and legends, its myths and ancient history. The distinctive feature of this land is that it is moving towards the sea. The poet Josep Pla wrote “ this county is essentially a watery flowing path amidst Mother Earth”.

Put another way, for the people of the Ebro, the river is not just a wide canal of water to sail down in canoe or kayak, rather, the Ebro has moulded and shaped in them a particular kind of character.

That identity, noticeably different from the rest of Catalonia, manifests itself in every way; the dialect, the landscape, the festivals, the crops, traditions, architecture, cuisine, music, dance, literature, history... “The river is life”, will often be heard on the lips of the folk from Baix Ebre if you take the time to listen.

Whether it is fishing, kayaks, punts, shallow draft vessels or walking on the river banks, leisure activities in the vicinity of the river are the main tourist attractions.

Apart from the interest the Ebro might have for cultural reasons, the river is, above all, something borne out of the majestic scenery, when it is coloured by the orange groves and when its power is harnessed between mountain sides.

A river that is on its way to the delta, winding through orange and olive groves along dry stone borders and beside old watchtowers that conjure up times when the Ebro was the information superhighway for merchants, ideas, concepts, beliefs, songs, controversies and gossip.

The good news is that the Ebro is nageable again these days, what better vantage point of the villages, crops and the daily doings of men and women than from the river itself. It is as if you were looking at the Earth from the Moon. Whether it is fishing, kayaks, punts, shallow draft vessels or walking on the river banks, leisure activities in the vicinity of the river are the main tourist attractions of Baix Ebre.

THE COAST, where there are still unspoilt beaches

On a coastline as built up as the Mediterranean, the Baix Ebre shoreline is something of an exception, and not only because of the Delta with its endless expanses of sand and shore.

Along the coast of l'Ampolla, l'Ametlla del Mar and el Perelló, not far from beaches with facilities, it is still possible to find solitary coves and inlets that seem to have never been discovered by anyone, even though barbaric pirates will have stopped off there five centuries ago.

This coastline is best experienced by walking the old coastal paths, through pine woods and along clifftops with magnificent views of the sea.

This coastline is best experienced by walking the old coastal paths, from town to town, along clifftops and through pine woods with views of the sea, (walking isn't confined to the hills), or by taking the GR 92, a long coastal path that runs from the north to the south of Catalonia along the seashore.

And at the end of the trail, a welcome prize awaits in the villages, ports and fish markets that breathe the fresh sea air as ever, as if tourism is something alien to them, and where the fish and seafood concentrate all the nutritional goodness of the waters of the sea and River Ebro combined.

FOOTPATHS that you will call you back

Baix Ebre is an ideal place for walkers. There are so many possibilities in each and every borough both on the coast and inland to get to know the area and its villages in a relaxed way along paths that have long been used by the local people.

If local footpaths are not enough, a couple of long distance paths top up what is available in the county. They are the GR 92, a path that goes from the north to the south of Catalonia, hugging the coast and providing a wonderful way to get to know the Ebro Delta and adjacent coastlines, under one's own steam and at one's own pace.

As well as this, the GR 99 follows the course of the river from Fontibre in Cantabria, arriving at the delta after forty two stages and 1.200 kms. The GR 99 was the first footpath to be recognised in the "Xarxa d'Itineraris Naturals", a programme of promoting footpaths by the Agriculture, Food and Environment Ministry of the Spanish Government.

CYCLE TOURISM, pedals for all

Baix Ebre is a paradise for cycling enthusiasts, whether you prefer mountain tracks or roads or just a gentle ride with the family. You can choose from the GR 99 or “Camí Natural de l’Ebre” or the “Via Verda de la Val de Zafàn”.

The latter is a route stretching from Aragon to Tortosa along a disused railway track that was converted into a popular cycleway for the general public. It crosses bridges, goes through tunnels, past valleys and ravines, and invites you to keep pedalling to the mouth of the River Ebro, across paddy fields.

Baix Ebre also has an extensive network of trails that are suitable or have been adapted for all those who like to see the world from the saddle of a bicycle, a great way indeed, to take in the views. It doesn’t stop there though, and there are plenty who say that the Ebro Delta is the perfect place for some family cycle outings, even with very small children.

Perhaps that is because the delta is so flat that the wheels seem to go round on their own, leaving the rider with nothing to do but enjoy the surroundings and make sure they don’t fall off!

GASTRONOMY ON THE LANDSCAPE, the fruits of Nature on a plate

Now that, when talking about good food everyone agrees that the best products are local ones, it is strange to think that in some kitchens local produce has never stopped being the one and only option. In “les Terres de l’Ebre” this is the case. Agriculture is still small scale here, and in the space of just a few kilometres, a range of produce is harvested, most of which is DO(protected designation of origin) thanks to its excellent quality. It is as if all the goodness of the Mediterranean is concentrated on this land.

That's why the restaurants use oil from their own groves, some of them centuries old, and the rice is DO (protected designation of origin) Ebro Delta rice, citrus fruits from the GI "Clementines de les Terres de l'Ebre", honey, fish and seafood from local ports, DO Terra Alta wine...

Baix Ebre is a flavourful place, and what can be seen all around you in the countryside ends up being served at tables laid ready in homes and restaurants, whose larders and kitchens remain faithful to their cuisine and baking. Sweets like "coques de panoli", "els pastissats" or the great variety of pastries live on. That doesn't mean that there aren't any restaurants that haven't innovated and experienced things outside the box. Baix Ebre has its Michelin stars too.

FESTIVALS AND EVENTS, a land with a full calendar

There is always something happening in Baix Ebre, because the local people are open, ready and willing to take advantage of any opportunity to have a celebration. Customs and traditions are not the same in Terres de l'Ebre as in the rest of Catalonia, Here, everyone belongs to groups and associations that are the lifeblood of street festivals done on a big scale.

The Renaissance Festival in Tortosa, for instance, has grown out of this dedication and has become very well known in just a few years. Fairs and cultural events fill the calendar and provide a window on the best of "les Terres de l'Ebre".

Baix Ebre marks even the most ancient of its traditional festivals with evident enthusiasm.

Longstanding traditions are honoured though, in ancient traditional festivals, like “Corpus a la Mare de Déu del Carme”, the Holy Week processions or pilgrimages. Here the roots of tradition go deep, and it is plain to see that the natives genuinely enjoy marking their cultural identity.
